

The MOST INFLUENTIAL Horsewomen

This issue will introduce you to four more stellar horsewomen that have contributed so much to the industry in their own way. Enjoy!

Sylvia Scott: Sylvia turned her life long love for horses into a lifetime of learning and evolving. She married principles of her education in psychology with her natural ability with animals (especially horses) to become one of the most intuitive teachers of natural horsemanship today. Sylvia is a mom to three grown children (Justin, Trevor and Aleshia) and wife to Daryl Scott. Learn all about Sylvia at her website www.naturalhorsetraining.com (note* Sylvia's site is to horse training what Moby Dick or Great Expectations is to English Literature! Don't expect to breeze through it!)

Julie Goodnight: Long before Julie had a show on RFDtv, she was a horse-master! Raised in Florida loving and riding horses on the hunter/jumper circuit. Throughout school she worked within the racing industry and today travels the country speaking about the relationship between horse and rider. Julie has become known for her clear, concise communication skills and her ability to help people crystallize their knowledge into applicable skills. Julie is mom to Hunter and wife to Rich Moorehead. Look for Julie on RFDtv, on the cover of the next issue of HorseSouth and on her website www.juliegoodnight.com.

Kerri Kent: Kerri's stamp on the horse industry is different. She started out as a horse loving swimsuit designer on the west coast. She applied knowledge with knowledge and developed the first line of Kerrits Clothing (comfortable riding wear) more than 20 years ago. These days she's again an industry pioneer being one of the first equine related companies to add a line of environmentally friendly clothing appropriately dubbed "GRASS". Kerri is a leader and an innovator and a credit to our industry. Learn about Kerrits clothing at www.kerrits.com

Melisa Pierce: Melisa's growing influence in this industry is hopefully reflective of people's inner desire to be inspired and uplifted. Melisa's business "Touched by a Horse" is more than a deck of cards or a daily inspirational email. Her life is a ministry of hope and acknowledgement that attitude does really determine
